SalesFolk

The salespeople who make solving their customers' problems their mission are always the most successful. Similarly, companies who strive to add value to their prospective customers throughout the sales cycle tend to generate more leads, see shorter sales cycles, have higher close rates, and have customers with greater LTV. This 'value-driven approach' also helps you win in the long-run, since not everyone you have a sales conversation with is ready to buy, but when they are, they'll remember the value you added, and that sense of reciprocity will bring them back to you when they're ready to do business.

Today's prospects demand instant, personalized action. If inbound leads aren't followed up with immediately, you'll lose them. If you don't discover serious pain in the first 5 minutes of a call, you'll lose them. If a demo isn't highly-relevant, they're gone. Your competitors are offering highly-relevant solutions to solve their immediate throbbing pain... are you?

HipLead

Treat replies from outbound like inbound leads: call them within 5 minutes. Just because someone is interested now doesn't mean they'll be interested an hour from now. They might get hit with emergencies and decide that your call isn't urgent. Or they might just forget about you. So be sure to call as soon as possible, while they still remember what you wrote.

The average human has an attention span of between six and eight seconds. That's less than that of a goldfish. Your call-to-action really needs to stand out to get the attention of your visitors. If the content targets visitors at the "awareness" stage, your primary goal is (probably) to ensure that the visitor remembers you. You wouldn't ask a visitor at this point to buy something.
